

I'm concerned over the proposal being considered to give LPFM stations priority over all FM translators. I listen to KLOVE on 91.1 out of Denver on a translator. Although, I believe I understand the concern of localism (that local stations are of more benefit to the community than non-local stations), I do not believe this is the case with KLOVE. I think that if the transmitted station is locally funded as in the case of listener-supported KLOVE, it should NOT be given a lesser priority just because it is a translator. I listen to KLOVE all the time. It is also a station my children listen to - by their own choice! In that respect, I'm glad that I don't have to worry about any questionable content on this 'positive and encouraging' station. I know many other people listen to and support this radio station in my area. There is not an equivalent alternative, so the loss of this retransmission would be very disappointing to many. I also appreciate the benefits that come from a national radio station, such as a sense of unity with other people across the nation. Because of these and other reasons too numerous to mention, I have to say that the retransmission of a locally supported national broadcast is most definitely in the best interest of the public.
